About the position:

A student scholarship is available in the Faculty of English, Adam Mickiewicz University in Poznań. The position is affiliated with the project ADIM (Across-Domain Investigations in Multilingualism), a Polish-Norwegian project financed by EEA Norway grants. ADIM is a collaborative project between three institutions, Adam Mickiewicz University in Poznań (AMU), UiT The Arctic University of Norway in Tromsø, and NTNU Norwegian University of Science and Technology in Trondheim. The project must be completed by April 30, 2024.

Requirements

Successful candidates should fulfill the following requirements:

1. BA in linguistics
2. Status of an MA student at the Faculty of English at AMU
3. Good background in foreign language acquisition and multilingualism, phonetics and phonology and/or syntax
4. Native or near-native competence in Polish, high proficiency in English, and working knowledge of other foreign languages (preferably Norwegian)
5. Preliminary research experience
6. Active participation in conferences, workshops
7. Very good written and oral communication skills
8. Well-organized, responsible, self-directed, co-operative and able to work in a team

Scope of responsibilities/project tasks

The scholarship holder will work on the following research tasks:

1. They will assist the PI in designing the test battery for the production and perception tasks, and the development of the background data elicitation instruments.
2. They will assist in the recruitment of participants, the preparation and running of phonological, syntactic and EEG experiments.
3. They will assist in the speech data collection, phonetic annotation and data analysis.
4. They will assist in the creation of a multilingual speech corpus and help administer the project website.

5. They will liaise with the PI and will be a (co-)author of project papers.
6. They will assist in other project activities such as workshop organization.
7. They will carry out other project-related tasks suggested by the PI.

Additional information

Project title: Modeling L3 acquisition in diverse settings (ADIM)] NCN GRIEG-1 (UMO-2019/34/H/HS2/00495)

The scientific investigation of multilingual language acquisition is vibrant and growing. However, studies typically focus exclusively on one language domain in a selected acquisition setting. What is missing is a broader picture of multilingual acquisition, processing and use. Especially the phenomenon of cross-linguistic influence (CLI) investigated across different domains in multilingual acquisition still remains largely unexplored. The ADIM project aims to bridge this gap by addressing these issues in an interdisciplinary and comprehensive manner. ADIM focuses on three groups of multilingual learners who share the same language repertoire but vary in their specific profiles with respect to the setting and stage of acquisition. Participants are L1 speakers of Polish with English as L2 acquiring Norwegian as an L3 in instructed and naturalistic settings respectively, both at initial and advanced stages of acquisition, and Polish/Norwegian L1 bilinguals acquiring English as an L3. While L3 research has so far predominantly been based on e.g. acceptability judgement tasks (for syntax) or perception/production tests (for phonology), the ADIM project will supplement these with methodology that has so far generally not been common in this field, EEG/ERPs and eyetracking. The novelty of the present project pertains to how electrophysiological evidence combined with more traditional behavioral methods can inform the theory of L3 acquisition, in particular, to examine transfer source selectivity in L3/Ln. ADIM will further test and modify existing theoretical models of L3 acquisition so that they offer an optimal explanatory framework which can account for the complexity of the acquisition process in the multilingual mind. The project will thus contribute to a greater understanding of multilingual competence and its acquisition and processing in general, but it will also document the speech patterns of Polish-Norwegian multilingual communities with different constellations of stage and setting of acquisition. The project is innovative as it has an unprecedented broad scope, it is interdisciplinary and applies cutting-edge technologies alongside a range of more traditional research methods. It is based on a close international co-operation between active research groups from three renowned European universities (i.e. AMU in Poznań, UiT in Tromsø and NTNU in Trondheim), with each partner institution specializing in one of the selected linguistic domains. The project will provide comprehensive research on a complex topic that is currently very significant to the research community and to the general public.
